What inspired you to start Insync Interiors?
I've always been an art enthusiast. Since childhood, I loved decorating the spaces around me, spending hours painting, and exploring historic places that opened my eyes to the beauty of architecture and storytelling through design. Over the years, this creative curiosity grew into a deeper appreciation for how thoughtfully designed spaces can influence emotions and everyday living. And when you're doing something out of pure passion, it flows effortlessly from within. That natural drive is what led me to start Insync Interiors.

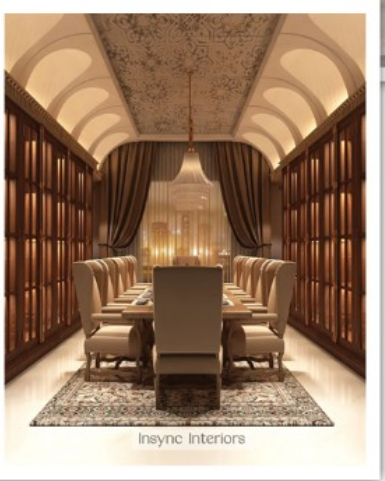

How would you describe your design philosophy in one line?
Luxury, functionality, and aesthetics thoughtfully brought in sync to shape your perfect space.

What makes Insync Interiors different from other design studios?
At Insync Interiors, we believe every space should feel deeply personal. We take the time to truly understand the client's taste, lifestyle, and budget, and then translate that insight into a unique design that reflects who they are. For us, clients aren't just projects, they become like family. This blend of personalization, genuine connection, and design integrity is what sets us apart.

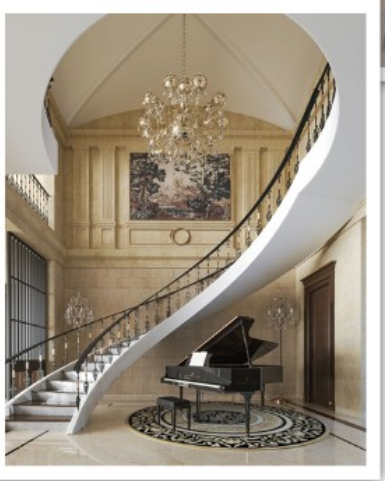

How do you balance aesthetics with functionality?
For me, functionality is the backbone of good design. I start by understanding how a space needs to serve the people using it, and then I layer in aesthetics that elevate the experience without compromising practicality. I also focus on creating low-maintenance designs that look evergreen—spaces that stay beautiful, relevant, and easy to live in for years to come. It's all about finding that sweet spot where elegance meets everyday comfort.

What current interior trend do you love working with?
While warm, earthy minimalism is quite popular, my heart has always leaned towards timeless luxury. We are doing what we do best — luxury neo-classical — and I absolutely love bringing that richness, elegance, and refined detailing into our projects. It's a style that feels both grand and enduring, and it truly resonates with the soul of Insync Interiors.

Do you prefer modern minimalism or classic luxury?
While I appreciate the clarity and simplicity of modern minimalism, I'm always a classical girl at heart and I love, love, love classical luxury. The richness of detailing, timeless charm, and sense of grandeur it brings to a space is something I truly connect with.

What's your favourite part of transforming a space?
My favourite part is watching a space come alive through décor — those final touches that complete the story we set out to create. But what truly makes it all worth it is the satisfaction and happiness on the client's face when they see the final result. Their appreciation, excitement, and emotional response are incredibly rewarding. And of course, our photographer Shreysht jain, plays a key role in helping us capture the soul of the space ,preserving every detail and emotion so the transformation can be appreciated long after the moment passes.

What's one design mistake people commonly make at home?
One common mistake is overcrowding a space — using too many elements or filling every corner without considering balance and flow. Another frequent issue is applying a lot of different materials on all the walls, which often makes the space lose its charm and coherence. A well-designed home needs a thoughtful mix of breathing space, intention, and visual harmony.

Where do you see Insync Interiors in the next five years?
In the next five years, I envision Insync Interiors growing into one of the leading design firms in India with a strong, talented team and a portfolio that extends far beyond national boundaries. I see us working overseas, collaborating on global projects, and consistently delivering designs that embody our signature blend of luxury, functionality, and timeless elegance. Our goal is to "Design globally, rooted in luxury and always in sync." um
